

Panel's Report on Beirut Attack Assails 'Errors' by U.S. Officers

By Joel Brinkley
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The House Armed Services Subcommittee on Investigations, which investigated the Beirut bombing of the U.S. Marine compound, has concluded that "very serious errors in judgment" by officers on the ground and up through the chain of command had left the Marines vulnerable to attack.

Beirut when the bombing occurred, "bears the principal responsibility," according to the panel, the House Armed Services Subcommittee on Investigations.

Its report said that General Paul X. Kelley, the Marine Corps commander, provided testimony that was "inaccurate, erroneous and misleading" when he testified before the full Armed Services Committee in November.

Members of the subcommittee said that General Kelley gave them inaccurate information about rules of engagement under which Marines carried unloaded weapons.

The gate outside the Marine compound, probably the most important element in the Marines' physical defenses, "was most assuredly open that morning," according to the summary of subcommittee findings.

Argentine Judge Indicts Ex-President Bignone

The Associated Press

BUENOS AIRES — Former President Reynaldo Bignone of Argentina was indicted Tuesday in connection with the disappearance and presumed murder in 1976 of two Communist militants, according to the lawyer for the families of the missing youths and other sources.

Ricardo Obregon Cano, who was governor of the central province of Cordoba in 1973-74, was arrested at the airport here on orders from Federal Judge Oscar Salvi as he arrived on a flight from Brazil.

Horacio Rebon, a lawyer who represents the families of the two men who disappeared, Luis Steinberg and Luis Garcia, said at a press conference that a district judge in Buenos Aires, Carlos Olivero, had charged Mr. Bignone with illegal privation of liberty and false testimony.

Mr. Bignone was president from July 1982 until Dec. 10, when he turned over the presidency to Raul Alfonsin, the winner of the general election in October.

Three days after taking office, Mr. Alfonsin initiated the prosecution on torture and murder charges of nine generals and admirals who served in the dictatorship's ruling junta.

In a related development, a former provincial governor linked in the early 1970s to the Montonero guerrilla organization was arrested as he returned to Argentina after eight years of exile.

The Montoneros are a radicalized branch of the populist Peronist Party that took up arms against President Isabel Peron in 1974.

The General Confederation of Labor, one of the country's two main labor confederations, stopped short of calling a strike but declared a "state of alert and mobilization" after a meeting of more than 200 union leaders.

The union-based Peronist party opposition vowed to oppose the union legislation in what would be the first confrontation between the Peronists and the ruling Radicals, a middle-class party.

In a televised speech Friday night, Mr. Alfonsin decreed a 50-cent-month raise in December for most public and private workers, far short of the $85 to $130 the unions had been demanding.

On Saturday, the president sent a bill to Congress to require unions to hold elections for officers "as soon as possible."

The Hazards of Defending Solidarity

Lawyers Fight On Despite Problems Posed by Regime

By Dan Fisher
Los Angeles Times Service

WARSAW — They have been described as the most important Polish political trials in 25 years, but, ironically, one of the top political defense attorneys in the nation will be answering questions rather than asking them.

Wladyslaw Sila-Nowicki, the dean of a tiny group of Polish lawyers who have made a career of handling political defendants, has been put on the government list of witnesses in the pending trials of 11 leaders and advisers of Solidarity, the outlawed trade union.

The action effectively bars Mr. Sila-Nowicki from playing his customary role.

To make sure that he is neutralized, the government can also use a regulation that disqualifies lawyers over 70 from practicing their profession without special permission.

Mr. Sila-Nowicki turned 70 in October.

But, as he noted in an interview, although the group of Polish political attorneys may be small, "there has never been a shortage of lawyers to do this work."

The imposition of martial law in December 1981 and the stream of trials against Solidarity activists have made national heroes of the few dozen men who regularly defend them. Their summations in political cases are printed in the underground press.

For some younger attorneys who had previously worked only on the fringes of such cases, martial law was a personal watershed, inspiring them to specialize in political trials.

Examples include Piotr Andrejewski and Wieslaw Johann, two of the attorneys defending four organizers of the dissident organization KOR. The four are expected to go on trial as early as January on charges of plotting to overthrow the Communist regime.

Several others will be defending seven Solidarity officials facing up to 10 years in prison under the same charge.

Like priests, these political defense attorneys work under a professional umbrella allowing them to say publicly things that most Poles would dare voice only in private.

The courtroom becomes not just a place to defend individual defendants but also a pulpit from which to preach a vision of what Poland might be.

It is an imperfect umbrella. Mr. Andrejewski, for example, was recently charged with "abuse of freedom of speech" in connection with a letter he wrote in which he compared the martial-law practice of internment Solidarity sympathizers without trial to a "kangaroo court."

He could be suspended from the bar for two years.

Over the years, Mr. Sila-Nowicki has similarly been threatened with disbarment and been harassed in other ways. Soon after martial law was imposed, he returned home to find the door of his apartment in flames in what was widely seen here as a message from the secret police.

Intimidation is not the only deterrent to defending political cases. Frequently, the clients have little money. "Making a career on political cases is not the best way of succeeding financially," Mr. Sila-Nowicki said in studied understatement.

In the courtroom, the defense attorneys play against a stacked deck. There are no U.S.-style juries. Verdicts in political cases are usually rendered by a panel of three judges, or, in the case of military courts like the one that is to hear the KOR trial, by senior military officers.

While the attorneys say some magistrates try to be just, all are subject to pressure from the political leadership. Defense victories in political trials are counted in reduced or suspended sentences, not acquittals, the attorneys say.

Still, if only in permitting lawyers like Mr. Sila-Nowicki to act as aggressive defense, Poland's legal system conforms more closely to Western notions of fairness and justice than some other countries in the Soviet bloc.

"The so-called margin of freedom is much bigger than in other East European countries," Mr. Sila-Nowicki said.

If only indirectly, Mr. Sila-Nowicki and his colleagues feel that they have contributed to that "margin of freedom," and that is what keeps them going in what would appear from the outside to be a hopeless undertaking.

"I never considered any case in which I appeared to be a lost cause," he said. "There's a difference between a case where the defense is difficult or has very little chance of being successful and a lost cause."

Asked why he does it, one of the younger political defense attorneys replied: "In the first place, the defendant in a political case needs someone there to give him psychological and emotional support."

As the remark indicates, the attorneys almost always share the ideals, if not the tactics, of their clients. That helps explain why the authorities, while tolerating the attorneys, consider them dangerous.

"My interest in political trials is dictated by my personality and my social views," said Mr. Sila-Nowicki.

He added: "I belong to perhaps a relatively small group of people who for a long time have openly criticized all branches of freedom and democracy. Such criticism was always legal, but often not received very well by the authorities."

Lech Walesa will be questioned about a meeting with underground union leaders. Page 3.

Arafat Leaves Lebanon With 4,000 Loyalists

By William Claiborne
Washington Post Service

TRIPOLI — The leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Yasser Arafat, and the 4,000 loyalists that comprise the remnant of his divided guerrilla army sailed out of Lebanon on Tuesday with the protection of French warships.

Mr. Arafat, who previously had been forced out of Jordan, Syria and Lebanon before again losing his only base adjacent to Israel, was accorded a hero's send-off PLO-style, as hundreds of guerrillas fired machine guns, rocket grenades and automatic rifles into the air as they did when they were evacuated Beirut in August 1982 during the Israeli siege of the Lebanese capital.

Israeli warships off the coast, which had delayed Mr. Arafat's departure for days with harassing bombardments, did not interfere Tuesday as five Greek passenger ships sailed out of the northern port city's harbor with destinations in several Arab countries, including Tunisia and North Yemen.

Mr. Arafat's vessel, the 6,167-ton Odysseus Elytis, was the fourth to leave, and as it prepared to weigh anchor, two high-flying aircraft, believed to have been Israeli, circled overhead out of range of anti-aircraft fire.

Although Mr. Arafat's aides said his destination was Tunis, which he made his base when evacuated from Beirut last year, there appeared to be a strong possibility he would disembark in Cyprus or elsewhere in the eastern Mediterranean and reach another destination by aircraft.

Tuesday's evacuation and a cease-fire between Mr. Arafat's loyalists and Syrian-backed Palestinian rebels, was arranged in November under the guidance of Saudi Arabia, but the possibility that Israeli warships might try to block the departure postponed the operation until now, Israel had refused to rule out the possibility of interference, saying instead it would fight terrorism wherever it found it.

Five French warships, including the carrier Clemenceau, provided safe passage for the evacuation.

[In Paris, a spokesman for the External Relations Ministry said Tuesday that Israel had not given an assurance it would not attack French ships escorting the evacuation ships, Reuters reported.]

But the seven-hour operation of loading the guerrillas and tons of personal possessions went smoothly. When all but two of the five Greek vessels had weighed anchor, Mr. Arafat arrived in a white station wagon and, without making any statement, boarded the blue and white Mediterranean cruise and ferry vessel.

Before boarding, Mr. Arafat said that "the struggle is not over. We will continue until we reach Jerusalem, the capital of our Palestinian state."

When the PLO leader appeared on an upper deck and waved to the crowd below, a cacophony of gunfire resounded through the port as the guerrillas and PLO allies emptied their weapons into the air.

As the Greek ships entered the port at about 9 A.M., they carried the United Nations flag, but after they were moored, the guerrillas hoisted the red, green, white and black banner of Palestine alongside the UN flag.

There was a bitterness quality to the guerrillas' mood, a mixture of relief at having escaped what could have been a devastating artillery siege by the Syrian-backed rebels and depression over having once again been loaded onto foreign vessels for a long trip to refugee camps.

One 20-year-old fighter named Nasser strained to keep his composure. "I'm too sad," he said. "I'm sorry."

But the leaders maintained their normal level of spirited rhetoric, with Khalil Wazir, the PLO military commander known as Abu Jihad, saying: "We are going to reorganize our bases to continue our struggle. We are going to continue the struggle. We have no choice. That is our fate as Palestinians."

Scores of trucks laden with new luggage filled the pier, and several speedboats on trailers were loaded onto the vessels.

Three trucks loaded with Karyna rockets pulled up to one ship bound for North Yemen, but Lebanese security officials and the port authorities did not allow them to be loaded on board.

Italy to Cut Beirut Force

Italy's defense minister, Giovanni Spadolini, said Tuesday in Rome that his country would gradually reduce the number of its soldiers in Beirut. The Associated Press reported. About 2,100 Italians are serving in Lebanon.

Mr. Spadolini, addressing the Senate, emphasized that Italy would remain a member of the four-nation force. He did not say how much the force would be reduced or when.

A Defense Ministry spokesman, who spoke on the condition that he not be identified, said that the cut would be permanent and separate from a temporary one-third reduction for Christmas that was previously announced.

New Chow Line Succeeds by Going Tastefully to the Dogs

By Judith Cummings
New York Times Service

BEVERLY HILLS, California — Doggonit, is a pooch expected to live a dog's life year in and year out, Christmas or no, unbrightened by the sort of pleasures humans can have just by visiting the nearest premium chocolates counter?

Not if Cynthia Grey can help it. Mrs. Grey, who lives in Hollywood, has started what is one of the merchandising success stories of this Christmas season. She has her eye trained on becoming the Famous Amos of the doggie treat business. After all, if there are fortunes to be made on luxury-priced chocolate chip cookies, why not dog biscuits?

Mrs. Grey came up with an idea for an expensive dog biscuit product, using an ordinary commercial dog biscuit, repackaged it in an embossed silver-foil box priced at $10 a pound, and named it Dogiva. And she got it stocked in some of the fanciest stores in the United States, just in time for Christmas.

Her idea has got her in the soup. Mrs. Grey is involved in a legal scrap with the New Jersey-based Campbell Soup Co., owner of Godiva Chocolatier Inc., a premium chocolate sold in an embossed gold-foil box in the same kind of stores.

Campbell wrote to Mrs. Grey in October, demanding that she stop selling the doggie treats under the Dogiva name and turn over any profits she had made to the soup company. She refused, and her husband, David, a lawyer, filed suit in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles to affirm her right to use the name. Campbell countersued, not only against Dogiva Ltd. but also against Saks Fifth Avenue, one of the stores selling the product.

James H. Moran, a Campbell spokesman, said Dogiva was an infringement on his company's product.

"We charged that they were engaging in unfair business practices," he said, "because they were using something that was very similar to our packaging and our logo. We also thought it was possibly harmful, because here was something not intended for human consumption in a package that resembles something for human consumption."

Last week Mrs. Grey retaliated by filing a $150-million suit against Campbell, charging it with interfering with her customers and causing her mental distress.

Let anybody think this is a case of a poor little housemaker pitted against a corporate giant, it is not so.

Probably the homeliest thing about the situation is the way Mrs. Grey put together the money to transform what used to be a homemade gift product for her friends' dogs into a business. She sold her Mercedes Benz 450 SL to acquire the money, according to her husband, who heads one of the biggest mass-market law firms in California.

Fear and Resentment at West Germany's No. 1 Nuclear Target

By Henry Tanner
International Herald Tribune

STUTTGART — The great mass rallies for peace over in West Germany. The first Pershing-2s which hundreds of thousands of demonstrators tried to prevent from being stationed, are in place and operational at Mutlangen behind barbed wire, American sentries and, on days of even the smallest demonstration, a wall of police.

The question now is whether the West German peace movement will turn violent after having failed to reach its first objective peacefully: whether the mass of protesters is willing to demobilize and stay home, and whether large numbers of resentful young Germans will seek refuge in a bitter anti-everything counterculture.

Nowhere are the questions more urgent and the emotions rawer than in this region, which is geographically, militarily and emotionally the hub of the German nuclear debate.

The Pershing-2s are being stationed here and nowhere else in West Germany or Europe. Other West German regions and four NATO countries, Britain, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands, are taking only the less threatening and therefore less controversial cruise missiles.

All three Pershing-2 sites, Heilbronn and Neu-Ulm in addition to Mutlangen, are within about 50 miles (80 kilometers) of Stuttgart. Within the same radius are scores of military installations, from barracks for U.S. and West German soldiers to munitions dumps, fuel storage sites for Pershings and maintenance, supply, communications and command facilities. Stuttgart is the home of EUCOM, the headquarters of U.S. forces in Europe.

Add to this at least two nuclear power plants and several large conventional ones; some of West Germany's most famous industrial plants like Daimler-Benz, Audi and Volkswagen; some leading high-technology enterprises, inland ports and railroad and highway junctions.

It adds up to what most people in the region think but do not always dare say out loud: "If war broke out, we would be the first to go."

"We have a great concentration of potential targets here," an official in Heilbronn, a city of about 110,000, said. He said that he could understand the concern that so many young people feel but that he did not think it was justified. After all, he said, "the Americans have been here for more than 30 years and before the Pershings, too, they had more than only sticks."

"I am afraid, I would like to leave," a Heilbronn woman who got married six months ago said. "I want to the Moroccan consulate to ask whether there would be work for us there." Her husband, who thinks they should stay, said: "We talk about this often, every day."

The nature of the protests is changing. The demonstrations are getting smaller but the demonstrators tougher and more willing to accept arrest and face water cannon. The police, too, are getting tougher. There have been clashes in Stuttgart and Frankfurt on relatively minor occasions.

A heated debate on the need for violence has begun among some of the militants.

The first act of outright sabotage by members of the peace movement was committed some two weeks ago near Mutlangen. A political science professor from Stuttgart, Wolfgang Sternstein, and a woman and two other men cut through the enclosure of a U.S. military camp and with a sledgehammer and steel cutters damaged a trailer truck of the type used for carrying Pershings.

"There is a great deal of Rastlosigkeit (perplexity) among the people because the missiles have arrived in spite of their protests; they ask themselves whether nonviolent resistance will ever be enough," a union official said. "But violence is out, almost nobody would accept it."

The official said she felt "a silent admiration, a silent solidarity" for Professor Sternstein because he acted on his convictions and accepted the certainty of several years in prison. "I would not do it myself and we would never call on others to do it," she said.

The definitions of violence and nonviolence are being blurred.

To those who praise or excuse him, Professor Sternstein did not engage in violence. They argue that he attacked machines only and vowed never to hurt a person; he announced his intention in advance, naming date and time of the operation, and he and his companions did not act stealthily when they cut through the camp enclosure but wore large white sheets on which they had written, in English, "Don't shoot, this is a nonviolent operation." After damaging the trailer truck, they would have had time to escape but waited to be arrested.

Professor Sternstein, who is 44 and has two sons, is a practicing Protestant. He takes his inspiration from the Berrigan brothers, the two Roman Catholic priests who committed comparable sabotage acts in the United States at the time of the Vietnam War.

He has said his purpose was to show the peace movement a middle way between abidance and uncontrolled violence. His critics charge that, on the contrary, he has opened the door to violence. But a Protestant church official calls him a "distinguished and rational man."

To many, Professor Sternstein reflects the inner tensions and contradictions of the peace movement.

According to the mayor of Heilbronn, Manfred Weinmann, the overwhelming "silent majority" accepts the coming of the Pershings without protest.

A leading Protestant pastor, also in Heilbronn, calls the practicing Christians who are anti-nuclear militants a "large active minority." They are "far more than just victims," he said of the church-related peace groups.

He cited Leingarten, a small community near Heilbronn, where Protestant members of the peace movement (Continued on Page 2, Col. 1)

Police Find Car Bomb In Turkish City, Near U.S., French Facilities

The Associated Press

IZMIR, Turkey — Turkish police found a car loaded with high explosives on Monday in a parking lot near U.S. and French facilities in this Aegean city, the city's martial law command said Tuesday.

It said the discovery was made in a fashionable district of Izmir, an ancient city formerly known as Smyrna.

The command said the small car was found abandoned in a parking lot about 109 yards (100 meters) from the U.S. officers' club and a seaside hotel frequented by American servicemen.

The car was also near the French Cultural Center and the French Consulate, police sources said.

The command said initial investigations showed that the car had been rented three months ago from an Istanbul car rental agency. Police said it was rented by a Jordanian of Palestinian origin whom they identified as Sabah Nimer. Military security agents were searching Izmir suburbs for him on Tuesday.

The command said 25 containers of liquid nitroglycerine and hand grenades were found in the car's trunk and engine compartment. It said the explosives could have caused "serious destruction and casualties."

Bomb experts were flown in from Ankara to disconnect the car's electrical system, police sources said.

It was not clear what tipped authorities off to the fact the car contained explosives.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization has its southern command headquarters in Izmir; about 1,500 U.S. servicemen are attached to the base.

Izmir, which has a population of more than 1.5 million, was a prime target for terrorist acts before the 1980 military takeover in Turkey. But NATO personnel and American servicemen in the city were not among the targets.

The statement from the military command linked Monday's incident to recent attacks in Lebanon and Kuwait, calling it the first attempt in Turkey "to continue bloody sabotage acts by bomb-loaded vehicles carried out in the Middle East."

Military authorities also said they were stepping up security measures around foreign offices and NATO buildings as a precaution against terrorist attacks.

They said they would prohibit parking around foreign-owned buildings, would check vehicles parked in the center of Izmir and would check identity cards of those entering or leaving the city.

ment put up their own list of four candidates to the nine-member local church council two weeks ago. Their candidates were known to the other parishioners as leaders of Bible classes. Three of the four were elected. "The same would happen in other parishes," the pastor said.

Many young Protestant pastors have become active leaders in peace groups.

"The Protestants are all right, the Catholics are waffling," said a girl during a demonstration.

There is no discernible anti-Americanism, although many young Germans blame the escalation of East-West military tension chiefly on President Ronald Reagan.

"We used to take our friendship with the Americans for granted; now it is no longer so obvious and I guess people feel that they have to do something about it personally," a journalist said.

A yawning generation gap exists. The young are vocal, the middle-aged are largely silent. "I've stopped talking to my parents about this a long time ago," is a frequent remark.

The young are less concerned than older people that the protests in West Germany have generated pressure on Western governments but not on the Soviet Union. They are aware of it and for some of them it causes nagging doubts. But in the end, they argue that the threat of nuclear death is so great and the arms race so mindless that it is their duty to fight it even if they can do so only in the West.

"These people have forgotten the Marshall Plan," said a businessman in his fifties. "If they are able to protest and march in the streets, it is only because the Americans are here."

The peace movement's greatest weakness is that its member groups are not able to agree on anything beyond the Pershings, several persons said. The groups range from outright pacifists, who reject all kinds of military force and are particularly strong among practicing Christians, to the Greens, who want to take West Germany out of NATO, to Social Democrats searching for a new defense concept within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

"This is dangerous because the only thing they can do together is demonstrate in front of the Pershing bases, and since the missiles are already there, the demonstrations inevitably become more futile and more frustrating and therefore violence-prone," an independent observer in Stuttgart said. He added that the Protestant church, the Social Democratic Party and some of the labor unions were trying to give the protesters an alternative by shifting the debate to the political level.

"They are giving asylum to the movement" in the hope of keeping it moderate but effective, he said. Some of the unions have organized discussion meetings in factories.

Church circles especially are afraid that frustrated young protesters who filled the streets this fall will either turn violent or "turn off and go to Katmandu," in the words of one pastor.

A Protestant church organization recently issued a call for constructive peace work and local pastors have been writing to all the members of the national parliament from this region asking them for an accounting on their efforts in behalf of peace.

"We must keep at the heels of the politicians," one of the pastors said.

Rumsfeld Delivers Letter From Reagan to Iraq

Reuters

BAGHDAD — Donald H. Rumsfeld, the U.S. special envoy to the Middle East, left Baghdad on Tuesday after delivering a written message from President Ronald Reagan to President Saddam Hussein of Iraq, the official Iraqi news agency, INA, said.

It said that the message concerned bilateral relations, the regional situation and U.S. efforts to achieve peace and stability in Lebanon.

The agency said Mr. Hussein "responded to the U.S. wish to continue contacts between officials of both countries in order to reach a better understanding of their positions on the problems of the region and international issues of common interest."

Some observers said that might signal progress on a resumption of diplomatic relations between the two countries, severed by Iraq during the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. A State Department official in Washington said Monday night that the United States was ready to restore full diplomatic ties.

Diplomatic sources in Baghdad said Iraq had been ready to resume diplomatic relations before its war with Iran began in 1980 but put off a decision lest it be interpreted as an attempt to curry favor with the United States.

The news agency said that in his talks with Mr. Rumsfeld, Mr. Hussein referred to the need for an independent and united Lebanon and the withdrawal of Israeli and other foreign troops from that country.

Reconciliation Talks
John M. Goshko of The Washington Post reported from Washington: The White House said Monday that failure by President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon to achieve a national reconciliation could be considered the kind of "collapse" that Mr. Reagan mentioned last week as a basis for pulling the U.S. Marines out of Lebanon.

But, after issuing that warning, Larry M. Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, sought to tone it down, saying, "We do not expect this failure to take place. We think it is still going in the other direction."

A senior White House official, speaking on condition that he not be identified, added that the United States was not pinning its hopes on any one development such as the reconciliation talks between Mr. Gemayel and the factions opposing his authority.

Last week, Mr. Reagan said the marines would be withdrawn if there was a total "collapse of order" in Lebanon.

Lebanon Attack May Dominate Reagan Session

Reuters

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan was expected to face close questioning Tuesday night on the Middle East at his first formal press conference since 241 U.S. servicemen were killed in a bomb attack in Beirut on Oct. 23.

Mr. Reagan answered questions from reporters in an informal 10-minute session last week, but he has not held a formal press conference since Oct. 19.

The news conference followed the release of a congressional study that concluded that the Beirut attack was at least partly due to "serious errors of judgment" by Marine Corps officers.

The Lebanese situation, including conditions under which the marines might be withdrawn, seemed likely to dominate Tuesday night's session.

UN Censures U.S.-Israeli Military Pact

The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS, New York — The General Assembly has voted to censure the new U.S.-Israeli agreement for greater military cooperation.

The vote Monday night on the Arab-sponsored resolution was 81-27 with 29 abstentions.

The resolution said the U.S.-Israeli accord "will increase Israel's intransigence and its war potential and escalate its expansionist and annexationist policies."

It demanded that all countries, "particularly the United States of America... refrain from taking any step that would support Israel's war capabilities and consequently its aggressive acts."

The Israeli ambassador, Yehuda Z. Blum, was repeatedly interrupted on "points of order" by Iraqi, Iranian, Libyan and Syrian delegates as he accused the assembly of bias against Israel.

Hossein Latifi, the Iranian representative, described the Israeli envoy as "the Zionist entity agent with their retarded mind and archaic logic" and "the extended arm of the filthy American imperialism [who] should be removed as a cancerous tumor... from the General Assembly."

The U.S. representative, Stephen J. Solarz, a Democratic congressman from New York, objected that such personal attacks were "proscribed" by the assembly's rules.

Mr. Solarz, in explaining the negative U.S. vote, said the strengthening of U.S. relations with Israel "is central to the pursuit of peace and is not aimed against any state in the region."

President Ronald Reagan and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Israel reached agreement in Washington on Nov. 29 on strengthening military ties.

The U.S.-Israeli accord was assailed Monday in another resolution, sponsored by a group of non-aligned countries and adopted 101-18 with 20 abstentions.

errors in judgment were made." He also said that Colonel Geraghty told the subcommittee that his superior officers "didn't make any specific recommendations" on how to improve security.

That means "the whole chain of command has to share some responsibility," Mr. Hopkins said. Mr. Nichols said the subcommittee would not offer specific recommendations on whether anyone should be court-martialed or otherwise punished. But Mr. Hopkins said the committee's report "will point to specific individuals who are to blame."

Noting that the officers above Colonel Geraghty "were trained men," Mr. Hopkins asked why they had not made recommendations on improving security. Nearly all of the admirals and generals in the chain of command visited the Marine headquarters at least once.

Mr. Hopkins said the subcommittee also questioned whether the Marines' mission was jeopardized by changes in the U.S. diplomatic posture in Lebanon. Specifically, he said, "When we started firing in support of the Lebanese armed forces, we were no longer neutral."

Some members of the subcommittee were less critical. In an interview last week, Representative David O'Brien, Republican of New York, said "I would hope that the subcommittee would issue its report based on something other than 20-20 hindsight."

EC Budget For 1984 Becomes Law

Parliamentary Initiative Bypasses Community Rift

Reuters

BRUSSELS — The European Community's 1984 budget was signed into law Tuesday after an institutional dispute, which boosted the European Parliament's morale but left the community's basic financial problems unsolved.

Piet Dankert, the parliamentary president, signed the budget of 25 billion European Currency Units ($22 billion) after the assembly successfully defied national governments' wishes over several key amendments.

The Parliament benefited from disunity among the community's foreign affairs ministers, who failed to agree Monday on any strong common challenge to aspects of the assembly's vote in Strasbourg last week that approved the budget.

Community sources said individual states, unhappy at Parliament's assertiveness, had the right to take court action against the assembly. But the political will appeared to be lacking.

In an apparent show of strength before elections in June next year, Parliament froze a British refund, pledged money for future industrial projects and exceeded total spending limits agreed by the Council of Ministers.

The freezing of the British refund of 750 million ECUs ($640 million) until at least March was the centerpiece of Parliament's strategy to force member governments into finally tackling much-needed financial reforms.

Member governments accept the need for economy measures but they have been unable to reach agreement on where to make cuts in the Common Agricultural Policy, the community's most expensive outlay.

The community's executive commission is expected to act swiftly to enforce the new budget. But it will have no effect on the commission's need to find stringent savings to make sure the community does not run out of money next year.

The 1984 budget is only 1.2 percent above this year's budget, an increase far under the inflation rate, and too low to meet annual farm price rises and other routine commitments.

U.S. Navy Recalls Second Battleship To Active Service

The Associated Press

BREMERTON, Washington — The U.S. Navy is recalling to active duty the battleship Missouri, on whose decks the Japanese signed the surrender ending World War II.

The 887-foot (271-meter), 45,000-ton battleship was retired from service nearly 30 years ago, after serving in the Korean War. The Missouri, like the New Jersey, which is on duty off the Lebanese coast, is equipped with 16-inch (41-centimeter) guns that can fire 2,500-pound (1,132-kilogram) projectiles up to 23 miles (37 kilometers).

The Missouri will spend about 18 months being overhauled in Long Beach, California, at an estimated cost of $400 million.

A third battleship, the Iowa, is being overhauled in Pascagoula, Mississippi. And in 1986, the Navy plans to call up the Wisconsin, the last of the four Iowa-class battleships built early in World War II.

The Missouri, which is built to carry a crew of 3,000, has 12-inch armor that could withstand a hit from an Exocet missile, according to a navy official in Bremerton.

Thatcher Condemns U.S. Aid for Irish

LONDON (Reuters) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on Tuesday condemned fund-raising in the United States for Irish guerrillas fighting British rule in Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Thatcher, who appeared in Parliament dressed in black, said that money given to Noraid, a New York-based group that raises money for the Irish-American community, "possibly had the result of... the death of an American citizen and the injury of others" in an Irish Republican Army bomb attack in London on Saturday. Five persons, including an American, were killed by the bomb, and 91 were injured, including two Americans. Noraid contends that the money goes to families in Northern Ireland.

On Tuesday, the Irish cabinet ordered a review of laws covering incitement to violence, which could lead to a ban on Sinn Fein, the political arm of the outlawed IRA. In Britain, sources said a ban was being weighed carefully. Sinn Fein captured nearly half the Roman Catholic vote in Northern Ireland at Britain's general election in June.

UN Censures South Africa on Angola

UNITED NATIONS, New York (Combined Dispatches) — The Security Council censured South Africa Tuesday for military operations in neighboring Angola and endorsed that country's right to reparations. All the members voted for the resolution except the United States, which abstained.

The resolution responded to a complaint by Angola that South Africa has committed repeated aggression against its territory. The Angolan ambassador, Eliseo de Figueiredo, charged that as recently as last Friday, when South Africa informed the United Nations that it would undertake the disengagement of its forces, another offensive was mounted.

Angolan officials, meanwhile, said Tuesday that Angola views South Africa's proposed mutual pullback of forces from the border of South-West Africa, or Namibia, as a maneuver to block Angola's call for the Security Council meeting and "will not even consider" the offer.

The officials, accompanying President José Eduardo dos Santos on a visit to Guinea-Bissau for a summit of the heads of state of the five Portuguese-speaking African nations, said the South African proposal was "merely a stalling tactic aimed at putting off our request for the Security Council meeting." The offer was presented Thursday in a letter from Foreign Minister R.F. Botha of South Africa to UN Secretary-General Javier Pérez de Cuellar.

González Sees Progress on EC Entry

PARIS (AP) — Prime Minister Felipe González of Spain said Tuesday that Spain and France "are in the process of moving closer" to a common view on the question of enlarging the European Community.

After an hour-long meeting with President François Mitterrand of France, who in January takes up the rotating presidency of the European Community, Mr. González said: "Fixing a date for Spain to join the Common Market is not the most important problem." He added: "After the Common Market summit in Athens, I was more concerned with the fate of Europe than with the enlargement of the Common Market."

The Spanish press has accused France of being the main obstacle to its entry into the Common Market. French farmers, already hurt by low food prices, have vehemently protested plans to include Spain and Portugal in the EC.

Swiss Protest Italian Secret Agents

ROME (Reuters) — Switzerland has sent a diplomatic note to Italy protesting what it terms repeated violations of Swiss sovereignty by Italian secret agents, Italian Foreign Ministry officials said Tuesday.

They confirmed local press reports, which said the note, presented Monday to the Italian ambassador in Bern, warned Italy that if the violations continued, relations between the two countries could suffer.

The Swiss authorities also demanded an explanation of a statement by an Italian official last August about Italian secret service operations outside a jail near Geneva where Licio Gelli, grandmaster of the illegal P-2 Masonic Lodge, was held before his escape. Mr. Gelli was awaiting extradition to Italy in connection with the collapse of the Italian bank, Banco Ambrosiano.

Sweden Reports Submarine Intrusions

STOCKHOLM (UPI) — Sweden issued on Tuesday a report on new alien submarine intrusions, which navy sources said were Soviet violations of the inner waters of the nation.

"The government looks with extremely grave concern on this new report of submarine violations," Defense Minister Anders Thunborg said. The document on submarine intrusions in the past three months was submitted to the government by Sweden's commander-in-chief, General Lennart Ljung.

The report said there were "at least three clear cases of violations this fall" in September, October and November. Two occurred during military maneuvers in southern Sweden and the third near military installations in the Stockholm archipelago, the report said.

Greyhound's 10,000 employees have voted by more than 74 percent in favor of a proposed three-year contract, accepting cuts in pay and benefits of 14 percent and ending a seven-week strike, the bus company announced Monday. It plans to resume full nationwide service Wednesday. (WP)

Otto Laschdorff will remain in the West German cabinet until a court decides whether there is enough evidence to indict him in a bribery scandal, the Bonn government said Tuesday. Chancellor Helmut Kohl approved the economics minister's decision to stay in the cabinet. (AP)

A hospital's right to force-feed a cerebral palsy victim who wants to starve herself was confirmed Tuesday by a judge in Riverside, California. errors in judgment were made." He also said that Colonel Geraghty told the subcommittee that his superior officers "didn't make any specific recommendations" on how to improve security.

That means "the whole chain of command has to share some responsibility," Mr. Hopkins said. Mr. Nichols said the subcommittee would not offer specific recommendations on whether anyone should be court-martialed or otherwise punished. But Mr. Hopkins said the committee's report "will point to specific individuals who are to blame."

Noting that the officers above Colonel Geraghty "were trained men," Mr. Hopkins asked why they had not made recommendations on improving security. Nearly all of the admirals and generals in the chain of command visited the Marine headquarters at least once.

Mr. Hopkins said the subcommittee also questioned whether the Marines' mission was jeopardized by changes in the U.S. diplomatic posture in Lebanon. Specifically, he said, "When we started firing in support of the Lebanese armed forces, we were no longer neutral."

Some members of the subcommittee were less critical. In an interview last week, Representative David O'Brien, Republican of New York, said "I would hope that the subcommittee would issue its report based on something other than 20-20 hindsight."

Michael Thomas, a former U.S. intelligence agent, arrived Tuesday at a prison in Lyons for a confrontation with the Nazi war criminal, Klaus Barbie, who is awaiting trial.

Ex-U.S. Agent Says He Saw a Roundup of Jews by Barbie

The Associated Press

LYONS — A former U.S. intelligence agent met the Nazi war criminal, Klaus Barbie, on Tuesday and said he recognized him as the man who personally led a roundup of Jews in this city during World War II.

Judicial sources said Michael Thomas, 65, met Barbie, 70, at the Lyons prison where he is being held while awaiting trial on charges of crimes against humanity for his activities as the top Gestapo official in Lyons during the Nazi occupation of France.

The investigating magistrate, Christian Riss, had requested the meeting for pretrial testimony on specific accusations against Barbie, the sources said. Judge Riss was present at the encounter.

Mr. Thomas, who now runs a foreign language program in New York, worked for the U.S. Army Counter Intelligence Corps during World War II and made several clandestine missions into occupied France.

On one trip, Mr. Thomas said he witnessed Barbie leading a roundup at the headquarters of the Union of French Jews in Lyons in 1943. After the raid, 86 people were deported to Nazi death camps.

Barbie was brought to France in February after being expelled from Bolivia, where he had lived since 1951 under the alias of Klaus Altmann.

Sweden Delays Return Of Computer Equipment To U.S. Pending Report

STOCKHOLM — Sweden has refused to return the pirated U.S.-made computer equipment it seized last month, pending the completion of a report expected Wednesday.

If a Swedish inspector fails to classify the equipment as war materiel, the shipment could be sent on to Moscow, although that was not considered likely. The U.S. authorities have said the advanced equipment was being sent illegally to the Soviet Union.

At a news conference Monday in Washington, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger displayed related computer equipment seized by West German customs officials, and urged Sweden to return the four containers of computer equipment it impounded Nov. 17 at the port of Helsingborg. He said the equipment could be greatly helpful to the Russians in producing military equipment.

Prime Minister Olof Palme declined Tuesday to comment on Mr. Weinberger's statement, saying he would take no action until he received an official report on the confiscated equipment.

Carl Almqvist, a war materiel inspector, was expected to conclude his study Wednesday. He confirmed that the containers seized by Sweden contained parts of the same VAX 11-782 computer displayed by Mr. Weinberger. The VAX 11-782, valued at $1.5 million to $2 million, is manufactured by Digital Equipment Corp.

On Nov. 14, customs officials in Hamburg had seized computer equipment shipped from a Cape Town company headed by a man identified as Richard Müller. The authorities later returned that equipment to the United States.

New U.S. Controls Urged
Earlier, Robert C. Tork of the Los Angeles Times reported from Washington:

Mr. Weinberger and Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan called Monday for tighter export licensing procedures on U.S. technology that could enhance Soviet military capabilities.

At the same press conference, the U.S. Customs Service disclosed that Mr. Müller, the ostensible purchaser of the seized computer, had been indicted in California in 1979 for illegally exporting semiconductor manufacturing equipment to the Russians.

Mr. Müller's South African company had received 15 shipments of high-technology equipment manufactured in the United States, U.S. customs officials said. They indicated that the equipment, valued at more than $7 million, had been re-exported illegally.

Mr. Regan said that current U.S. regulations had not provided for a pre-export check on either the electronics company or on Mr. Müller.

Mr. Weinberger said the computer and its associated equipment would have helped the Russians make "vastly more accurate and destructive weapons" at a savings of hundreds of millions of dollars.

New U.S. Army Uniforms Ill-Received in the Field

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Soldiers say they're too hot, too heavy, too hard to dry, too hard to keep from wrinkling and just generally sloppy. But the U.S. Army is going ahead with the purchase of millions of new camouflage uniforms.

It has already spent nearly $205 million for 6.4 million sets of the new fatigues and, according to a message circulated to major commands last month, "responses from the field" have been "universally unfavorable." Army officials said Monday that they plan to spend $432 million on 13.4 million sets of the nylon-and-cotton blend uniforms in a four-color "woodland pattern."

The objective is to outfit each of the more than 778,000 regular army soldiers and 670,000 national guardsmen and reservists with at least four sets of uniforms.

Army officials acknowledged they had received complaints about the garb from some of the troops sent to Grenada in October. But the complaints began before that, and the army said the heat problem had been under study by its logistics command even before the Grenada invasion.

Because of the objections, a logistics task force has developed plans for a lightweight version of the battle dress to be tested in the field next year. Army officials said the lighter uniform could be used in warmer climates.

African Nations to Seek Aid for Drought Victims

Reuters

HARARE, Zimbabwe — Drought is causing enormous suffering in southern Africa and the victims are planning an appeal for international help.

Regional officials estimate the drought cost six nations — Botswana, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Swaziland and Zimbabwe — at least one billion dollars in 1982-83, a financial burden they said could take years to overcome.

They said about four and a half million people are suffering in Lesotho, Mozambique and Zimbabwe alone and cattle are dying by the hundreds of thousands.

The Southern African Development Coordination Conference, the main regional development organization, has drawn up an appeal for $300 million in emergency aid from all parts of the world, the officials said.

It will be presented to the annual conference meeting in Zambia in February. Fifty countries and aid organizations attended the previous talks in Lesotho last January. Nine nations formed the conference in 1980 to assist development and reduce economic dependence on South Africa.

Conference officials said considerable amounts of aid had already reached the area, but more was required for immediate needs and long-term recovery programs.

The conference said there had been an almost total loss of cereal crops in southern Mozambique and many animals had died. Food and other aid totaling $58.4 million is needed.

In Zimbabwe, two million people, about a quarter of the population, are suffering. About 100,000 cattle have died and the projected final toll is 450,000, about 30 percent of the country's herds. The country seeks $120 million in aid.

In Lesotho, at least 100 people are known to have starved to death in the first five months of this year. Almost 750,000 of its 1.2 million people need emergency food aid.

SEOUL — A court upheld prison sentences of four to six years for the six Chinese hijackers who forced an airliner to fly to South Korea in May. But it hinted that the government might be lenient on political or humanitarian grounds.

White House Considers Placing Excise Taxes on All Forms of Energy Use

By Martha M. Hamilton
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration is considering an across-the-board excise tax on all forms of energy as part of the budget deficit-cutting package.

The larger debate continues over whether to include any tax proposal in the recommendations for the 1985 fiscal year. But, assuming that there is a tax plan, Treasury officials are inclined toward the energy levy as one that would spread the revenue-raising burden across a broad spectrum of taxpayers and pose fewer political problems than the excise tax on oil only that President Ronald Reagan proposed a year ago.

In January Mr. Reagan proposed a three-year standby tax increase beginning in fiscal 1986. It included a $5-a-barrel excise tax on oil and a 5-percent individual and corporate income surtax. The taxes were to go into effect only if the deficit remained above a certain amount, the economy continued to recover and Congress enacted specified spending cuts.

The administration did little to promote its tax proposals, but it was clear that the oil excise tax proposal would have faced stiff opposition in Congress.

An energy tax is also among the major items that the Senate Finance Committee is considering in its own deficit-reduction plan, along with an income surtax for upper-income households ($60,000 and over for joint returns and $42,000 for individual ones) and corporations.

The proposal would levy a 2.5-percent tax on all forms of energy consumed in the United States including oil, natural gas, natural gas liquids, coal and electricity. It would be the broadest consumption tax in the federal code.

The tax would be levied at the easiest collection point in the distribution system, not from the user. For instance, the oil tax would be imposed on the sale of petroleum products by a refinery while the gas tax would be imposed on the sale to a local distribution company.

John E. Chapoton, assistant treasury secretary for tax policy, said over the weekend that no element has been ruled out for inclusion in a contingent tax proposal, but that the broader energy tax appears more politically feasible than last year's excise tax on oil.

U.S. Terrorist Threatened to Use Nerve Gas

By George Lardner Jr.
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — A terrorist now in prison for murder once sent toxic chemicals through the mail to a Supreme Court justice and threatened to explode a nerve-gas device in the Capitol, authorities in Los Angeles said Monday.

According to an article scheduled to be published by the Institute for Foreign Policy Analysis, Muharem Kurbegovic, 40, also threatened to assassinate a president with a homemade nerve-gas bomb shortly before he was arrested in August 1974 for a bombing at Los Angeles International Airport that killed three persons.

The article cites Mr. Kurbegovic's activities to support the authors' thesis that chemical and biological weapons are more of a terrorist threat than nuclear weapons.

"The likelihood of terrorists constructing a nuclear device, that works is infinitesimally small," said one of the authors, Neil C. Livingstone. "On the other hand, there are all these nasty germs and what-have-you that are well within the reach of terrorists today. You can buy anthrax and botulism through the mail for 'scientific purposes.'"

According to Mr. Livingstone and his co-author, Joseph D. Douglas, terrorists using chemical or biological weapons that could be made in a kitchen or garage could kill thousands of people.

The authors did not say which president, Richard M. Nixon or Gerald R. Ford, was Mr. Kurbegovic's target. But they said that the threat was taken seriously by the Secret Service.

The head of the Los Angeles Police Department's bomb squad, Arleigh McCree, said that the convicted bomber "threatened a lot of people and sent toxic chemicals through the mails to Supreme Court justices."

He said Mr. Kurbegovic recorded a message around June 1974 in which "he talked about bombing the Capitol building with projected nerve-gas munition."

Mr. Kurbegovic was born in Yugoslavia and has been living in the United States since 1967. He was arrested Aug. 20, 1974, for having exploded a bomb two weeks earlier at the Los Angeles International Airport, killing three persons.

In testimony in Manila Tuesday, Rosendo Cawigan examined a gun, which is alleged to be the one that killed Benigno S. Aquino Jr. He said he was shown the gun by a Communist leader several months before the killing.

Witness in Philippine Probe Asserts He Also Had Planned to Kill Aquino

The Associated Press

MANILA — A government intelligence officer testified Tuesday that he had planned to kill Benigno S. Aquino Jr. after learning that the opposition leader was out to kill him.

He said he had received word of the death threat in March from an unidentified lieutenant colonel in the office of the armed forces chief, General Fabian C. Ver.

Rosendo Cawigan, 44, is a main government witness in the probe of the assassination of Mr. Aquino on Aug. 21. Mr. Cawigan told an investigating commission that both he and Rolando Galman, the man the government says assassinated Mr. Aquino, were recruited by Communists to kill Mr. Aquino. Mr. Galman was slain moments after Mr. Aquino.

Mr. Cawigan claimed that before he could carry out his plan he learned that Mr. Galman had shot Mr. Aquino.

Mr. Cawigan said he had become "a personal enemy" of Mr. Aquino since testifying against the former senator in a subversion case for which Mr. Aquino was sentenced to death by a military court in 1977. He claimed that all other witnesses against Mr. Aquino in the case had been killed by the former senator's men.

Judge Rules That U.S. Has Role to Play in Veterans Suit

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — A federal district judge in Brooklyn has refused to exempt the U.S. government from being a party in the lawsuit by Vietnam War veterans against makers of the herbicide Agent Orange.

"You're in," Chief Judge Jack B. Weinstein told Justice Department lawyers in rejecting their motion to drop the government from the case. The lawyers had based their motion on a long-standing doctrine that a person cannot sue the government for injuries received during military service.

The judge indicated that the government in any event might be held liable for claims by nonmilitary wives, parents and children of the veterans. "Certainly," he said, "you wouldn't fault the wife for having intercourse with the husband, or the children for being born?" The veterans say they suffered internal and genetic injuries from a potent contaminant, dioxin, that they say the companies knew was in the plant-killer when they sold it to the army. The military used it to clear covering vegetation and destroy food crops deemed vital to Vietnamese and North Vietnamese troops. The judge set further arguments for next month.

Independents Give Majority To Nakasone

Leader Vows to Remain Despite Election Setback

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

TOKYO — The ruling Liberal Democratic Party, which lost its majority in the lower house of the Diet, or parliament, in elections Sunday, has been joined by eight independent legislators to produce a majority.

Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone said at a press conference Monday that he was determined to remain in office despite the election reversal. He said that no political vacuum could be allowed "at a time when problems are mounting both at home and abroad."

It appeared, however, that Mr. Nakasone faced a struggle to retain control of his party and thus remain prime minister. Several party leaders criticized his handling of election strategy, but they stopped short of demanding his resignation.

In Sunday's elections, the Liberal Democrats captured 250 of the 511 seats in parliament's lower house, six short of a majority and 36 fewer than they had held in the chamber disbanded Nov. 28.

The results signaled more jockeying among the five major factions within the ruling conservative coalition. Former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, who won overwhelming re-election from his rural district despite a bribery conviction, controls the largest faction, with one-fourth of the Liberal Democrats' seats. Although Mr. Tanaka himself won re-election, many of his colleagues were defeated because of the taint of corruption he has brought to the party, analysts said.

Some experts said they thought Mr. Nakasone would be nominated for prime minister in the new House next week, although perhaps with difficulty. But they predicted months of in-fighting ahead if he hopes to continue as party leader after his term expires in November. (NYT, WP)

Walesa Faces Inquiry Over Secret Session

Reuters

WARSAW — Lech Walesa will be questioned by police about a secret meeting he said he held with underground leaders of the banned Solidarity trade union to organize protests against food price rises, Jerzy Urban, a government spokesman, said Tuesday.

He also said that a Warsaw priest who supports Solidarity had been warned by the authorities that he faces charges of illegally possessing explosives, tear gas and ammunition, which police said they found in his apartment.

The priest, Father Jerzy Popiełuszko, later dismissed the charges as "ridiculous and laughable."

The announcements by Mr. Urban appeared to indicate that the government did not intend to relax its pressure on Solidarity following the failure of a national day of protest called last Friday.

Mr. Urban termed the day of protest a defeat for the union and said that no more than 2,000 people took part in demonstrations in cities across Poland. He denied the assertion by Solidarity supporters that a massive police presence was responsible for the small turnout.

Mr. Urban said that, although demonstrators tried to march in seven cities, including Warsaw, there was no rioting.

Eyewitnesses reported Friday that demonstrators were beaten by riot police in Wrocław, Gdansk and Poznań.

In an apparent reaction to Mr. Urban's statement, Solidarity's underground leadership issued a new communiqué attacking official plans to raise food prices Jan. 1.

Mr. Urban did not say when Mr. Walesa, the Solidarity leader, would be questioned. Mr. Walesa did not attend a call for questioning last week by security services in Gdansk, saying he was ill.

A spokesman for Mr. Walesa refused to say whether the union leader would obey the latest summons. He said that Mr. Walesa had decided to make no further public statements this year after the publicity he received in connection with winning the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize.

'The Sea Did Not Swallow' Taiwan

Five Years After Losing U.S. Recognition, Island Thrives

By Michael Parks

Los Angeles Times Service

TAIPEI — Five years after the United States broke diplomatic relations with the Chinese Nationalist government here and pushed people to the point of panic, Taiwan has developed a new self-confidence, a feeling that it has coped with the worst and need not fear the future.

The island's dynamic economy is again surging ahead, keeping its 18.5 million people among the most prosperous in Asia. Political maturity is coming as the ruling Nationalist Party of the late President Chiang Kai-shek hesitantly but increasingly opens the government to broader participation.

And, to its surprise, Taiwan is far from isolated internationally, even without extensive diplomatic ties.

"The sky did not fall, and the sea did not swallow us," William Chen, 43, an engineer who manages his family's electronics business, said the other day. "We all expected the worst, even an invasion by the Chinese Communists, but we are okay, really okay."

This assessment is widely shared and appears to have brought a remarkable change in the national mood here from the dark days that followed the Carter administration's decision in December 1978 to switch U.S. recognition from the Chinese Nationalists on Taiwan to the rival Communist government in Beijing as of Jan. 1, 1979.

'Reality' Did Not Change

"Naturally, we wish the United States had continued diplomatic relations with us, but the American de-recognition did not change the reality of Taiwan," a newspaper editor remarked as he reflected on the past five years. "That reality is shaped by our own efforts, we found, and not by others' perceptions of us."

"You could say we act — we produce, we sell, we live, we thrive actually — and therefore we exist. When we realized this, our anxiety passed."

Coping with the U.S. break in diplomatic relations even seems to have strengthened Taiwan in some ways, many people, both in and out of government, now feel.

The strategic conclusion that Taiwan's future, its security as well as its prosperity, depends ultimately on its economic vitality has brought increased efforts to move into technology-intensive industries, to develop more export markets and to raise living standards even higher.

Politically, the uncertainties of the future convinced many in the Nationalist leadership, including President Chiang Ching-kuo, the son of Chiang Kai-shek, of the need to broaden the party's base with greater participation by native Taiwanese, thus reducing friction with those who came here in 1949 after the Communist victory on the mainland.

More Than Just an Economy

Social, educational and cultural programs, so long the stepchildren of Taiwan's development efforts, are now getting more attention in the belief that "we must be more than economic creatures," as a professor of psychology put it. "The anxiety of the past few years made us see the shallowness of our society, and we are trying to remedy it," the professor said.

Taiwan's defense capabilities are, in the opinion of informed foreign analysts, stronger than they were five years ago.

"The Carter and Reagan administrations both sold enough weapons to ensure their ability to deter any attempt to invade or blockade the island," one analyst said. "Their superiority

'You could say we act — we produce, we sell, we buy, we grow, we live, we thrive actually — and therefore we exist. When we realized this, our anxiety passed.'

comes from technology, from very effective weapons systems, not from numbers.

"Ultimately, their security is political rather than military because China's relations with the United States, with Japan, Western Europe and Southeast Asia are far, far too valuable to jeopardize by even threatening this place with force. Arguably, this makes Taiwan more secure now than when the U.S. had a defense treaty and troops here, though [the Nationalists] would not agree."

The precedent created by the establishment of the large, nominally nongovernmental U.S. mission here, the American Institute on Taiwan, which replaced the U.S. Embassy, has enabled 14 Western European countries to open trade offices here despite some objections from Beijing. Twenty-four countries maintain diplomatic relations with the Republic of China, as the Nationalist government is called, but only South Korea, Saudi Arabia and South Africa are regarded as significant among them.

International Companies

Taiwan's dynamic economy — real growth of 6.5 percent is expected this year, increasing the gross national product to more than $50 billion — is attracting more and more large international companies, many of which had held back from doing business here for political reasons.

Nine major West European banks have opened offices in Taiwan, trade missions come almost weekly from around the world and foreign investment continues to grow. Pan American World Airways resumed its flights from Japan and the United States in June after a five-year hiatus and over Beijing's objections, and the Dutch airline, KLM, has begun flights from Europe, also ignoring mainland Chinese protests.

"Five years ago, a doomsday scenario seemed more likely," K.L. Huang, a bank economist, said. "We feared that the loss of U.S. recognition, which had been so much a fact of life and an underpinning for all we had done, might mean our collapse. We were afraid of losing our export markets, the decline of investor confidence, unemployment, bankruptcies; in short, an accelerating economic collapse, bringing with it social and political collapse."

"This was never realistic, but we had to prove to ourselves that we could survive, and not just survive but do better... that is why there is such a strong sense of self-confidence today. We know we are not going to disappear, not tomorrow and not a decade from now."

Although the Nationalist government put on a brave face and calmed the angry anti-U.S. demonstrations that erupted after Washington broke diplomatic relations, "We all had the same what-will-become-of-us fear," a senior government official recalled, asking not to be quoted by name.

"We were all bitter, just so, at being treated so shabbily by the U.S., and we were all frightened that everything we had done on this island over 30 years would be lost," he went on. "Oh, we might survive this American sellout, we knew, but the prosperity, the stability and the international respect we had enjoyed were in danger. We said we would go it alone, but doing it, we knew, was going to be very difficult."

Taiwan's greatest strength in this test came from its economic success, which is nearly legendary in postwar Asia.

"Our businessmen just won't quit," said James C.Y. Soong, director-general of the government information office. "If things are difficult, they try harder, look for another way, keep pushing."

More to the point perhaps is Taiwan's high living standard, perhaps higher than anywhere else in Asia except Japan, which gives practically everyone a stake in economic growth and the system that encourages it.

Many Emigrated to U.S.

"I remember going barefoot as a boy, and so do a lot of other people," Chen Chi-hsiang, an electrical engineer, said as he sat in his comfortable four-room apartment with a stereo system, a video tape recorder and personal computer. "I may have done better, but even those at the bottom are riding motorbikes and watching color televisions and planning to buy cars and bigger apartments."

"It is not just government propaganda that life gets better with hard work, it is the reality. That is the real reason for our confidence. Sometimes the future does look bad, and I would say the world recession was as much a challenge to us as the break in diplomatic relations with the U.S., but we managed to come through it and are stronger for it."

Even in the view of the Nationalists' critics here, Taiwan has emerged from this five-year test stronger politically and socially as well as economically.

"We felt like international orphans five years ago, and this led to a tremendous loss of confidence," Antonio Chiang, an editor of opposition magazines, said. "We were almost paralyzed with fear. At dinner, people would sit around wringing their hands. Many emigrated to the United States.

A young woman seems to symbolize Taiwan's rediscovered balance with this traditional exercise of holding a fan still.

"Well, nothing happened. The worst time is past. People have calmed down and we know we will survive."

One important result of this experience, Mr. Chiang continued, is that the Nationalist government can no longer use the "Communist threat" to justify its authoritarian rule, including continued martial law. Another has been the widespread conviction, he said, that Taiwan must concentrate on its own problems to assure its future and worry less about what Beijing might do in its desire to reunite the island with the mainland.

"We have now seen that all the strength of the Kuomintang [the Nationalist Party] comes from this land, this people," Mr. Chiang said. "If they don't realize that, they will lead us into a dead end."

"We want them to identify with Taiwan," he continued, reiterating opposition criticism that the Nationalists continue to operate on the illusion that they will recover the mainland and that Taiwan is just a temporary refuge. "If they don't identify with us, people here cannot support them forever. If they are going to identify with us, then they must make a long-range program, a timetable, for Taiwan's political as well as its economic development. We cannot have an illusion as a national goal and hope to survive."

While acknowledging that such arguments have some validity as well as wide appeal here, younger Nationalist Party and government officials warn that they also tend to undermine the government by calling into question its legitimacy, which is based on its claim to be the legal government of all China, including Taiwan province.

"There is not only room for reform," said Chen Li-an, deputy secretary general of the Nationalist Party's Central Committee, "there is also need for it... However, which reforms, how to implement them, and so forth. On all this, there are differences even within the opposition."

'We felt like international orphans five years ago, and this led to a tremendous loss of confidence. We were almost paralyzed with fear. At dinner, people would sit around wringing their hands. Many emigrated to the United States.'

Opposition and independent candidates polled 29 percent of the votes cast in this month's legislative elections, but won only nine of the 71 seats at stake because of the sharp divisions among themselves.

Had a stronger and united opposition emerged from the elections, it would have been better, say younger Nationalist officials, who characterize themselves as progressives and want a more open political system. When the leading opposition figure, Kang Ning-hsiang, was defeated after months of radical attacks on him as too moderate, a government official remarked: "It would have been better if we had lost 10 seats and kept Kang Ning-hsiang as a partner in dialogue about the future."

What that future might be, few have any clear idea.

The government, for the record, insists that it is committed to the reunification of China and to the Nationalist recovery of the mainland, the bequest of Chiang Kai-shek, but at the same time declares that it will never negotiate with the Communists.

Beijing's carrot-and-stick strategy, launched five years ago to hasten reunification, appears to have lost much of its impact. The incentives of nationalism and economic benefits (the mainland offers the world's largest market to the entrepreneurs of Taiwan) seem to have limited attraction, and the threats implied in an uncertain future are no longer frightening.

"All the arguments over reunification have simply numbed people's minds," the publisher of a leading pro-government newspaper said. "and they dismiss them all as empty speculation. The matter is serious in historical terms, but most find it irrelevant to their lives. And, of course, there is deep suspicion about all the Communists' proposals. Frankly, we doubt very much whether a single promise would be kept."

Another great launch.

Champagne corks are popping this autumn as the International Herald Tribune launches its sixth simultaneous printing operation.

This time it's in the Hague — for faster, more reliable distribution throughout Northern Europe. Last year it was a new satellite link to Singapore. Two years earlier it was Hong Kong. And during the 1970's, the Trib opened new printing sites in London and Zurich.

Why this rapid expansion? To meet the needs of the growing number of busy decision makers who want fast, dependable access to the Trib's concise, complete, objective overview of world news. Breaking out the champagne comes naturally for the Trib. Born in France in 1887, its global headquarters are still in Paris. And we don't intend to let the bubbles settle.

Plans are already under study for additional printing sites in other world capitals. All to speed the Trib even more swiftly to its third of a million VIP readers in 164 countries around the world. Cheers!

The global newspaper.

UN Agency Not Expected To Alter Report Faulting Russians in Jet Disaster

By Richard Widkin
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Unless the Soviet Union can come up with some strong new evidence, the International Civil Aviation Organization is not expected to change its preliminary conclusion that the shooting down of a South Korean airliner Sept. 1 was unjustified, aviation officials said.

The agency, meanwhile, is continuing to develop proposals to prevent any new disasters.

A draft report prepared by a special inquiry team established by the Montreal-based aviation agency significantly undercuts the Soviet arguments. The draft was made public last week by the governing body of the 152-nation group.

The draft report rejects a Soviet contention that the South Korean jet was on an intelligence mission. It says that, because the Russians assumed that the Boeing 747 was on an espionage mission, they "did not make exhaustive efforts to identify the aircraft through in-flight visual observations."

It also indicates that, since there were no signs that the airline's pilots were aware they were being intercepted by fighter planes, the Russians had not complied with procedures for warning intruders that they had flown into prohibited airspace.

The Korean Air Lines 747 crashed into the Sea of Japan near the Soviet island of Sakhalin, killing all 269 people on board.

Prepared by eight experts who are employees of the aviation agency and who do not represent member countries, the draft report might still be modified before it is endorsed by governmental bodies that belong to the organization. But officials say this is not likely.

The decision to make the draft report public was made at a two-week closed meeting of the agency's 33-member council, its governing body. The council resolution also forwarded the draft report to the 15-nation Air Navigation Commission, asking it to report back with a detailed analysis.

The vote on the overall resolution was 28 in favor, with the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia abstaining. China is the only other Communist country on the council, which is affiliated with the United Nations.

The United States had said it wanted the council to issue a formal condemnation.

One official said the U.S. position had been vindicated by the inquiry team and added, "Now let's be constructive and keep this from happening again."

A good deal of work already has been done at the aviation agency to prepare the way for actions aimed at avoiding any more disasters.

On the technical side, the Air Navigation Commission recently took the position that existing interception procedures were adequate if they were followed. But, drawing on the lessons of the Korean incident, its members have drafted proposals to strengthen what is already on the books.

One key proposal would be to ensure that the flight plans of civil aircraft on an international trip be forwarded well in advance from the air-traffic control system of the departing country to air-traffic officials in other countries that might have an interest in the flight plan, including countries close to the projected flight paths.

Another key proposal would improve communications links between civil and military air-traffic authorities in an individual country and between air-traffic authorities of neighboring countries.

Still another calls for enabling fighter planes and air-defense stations in all countries to broadcast on the emergency radio frequency that is standard for all civil aircraft, something Soviet military pilots have been unable to do.

On the legal side, proposals have been put forward to amend the international civil aviation convention to explicitly prohibit the use of force against civil aircraft. Legal changes of this sort would probably take several years.

Russians Turn Over Debris

Soviet authorities on Tuesday turned over to Japanese and American officials 83 items recovered from the crash of the South Korean jetliner. The Associated Press reported from Nelsk, U.S.S.R., where the transfer took place.

The transfer was the second of its kind. The Americans and Japanese acted on behalf of South Korea, which does not have diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union.

Spacelab German Urges More Europeans in Crews

By Thomas O'Toole
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — The first European to share space flight with American astronauts has been assigned to future shuttle flights.

"I share that view to some extent," he said. "The memorandum of understanding signed by the Europeans and Americans called for joint space flights by Europeans and Americans, not one European and many Americans. I think the Americans have to rethink this agreement to make it fairer."

In the two-hour post-flight briefing, the Columbia's commander, John W. Young, said he was not a candidate for any specific future flights, although he hoped on spending 35 days in space on six flights, the most trips in history.

"I'm probably going to be stuck on the ground for a long time," Mr.

Young, a retired navy captain, said. "I don't think anybody's going to kick me upstairs because I'm going back to head up the astronaut office. I somehow was put on the Astronaut Selection Board for new astronauts. There's a lot to do."

Mr. Young was asked if the leakage of hydrazine fuel that scorched two instruments that supply hydraulic steering power to the shuttle's wings and tail on landing ever threatened the Columbia's crew. He said that hydrazine never decomposes enough to burn anything before the atmospheric pressure outside the spacecraft reaches two pounds (900 grams) per square inch, the equivalent of 45,000 feet (13,680 meters) altitude, where the pilots already have the shuttle on its final landing approach.

The back-to-back computer failure forced the crew to "free drift" in space for more than four minutes and caused an eight-hour landing delay while flight directors on the ground tried to figure out what went wrong.

"Nobody knows the answers to these questions yet, but I can tell you one thing: NASA won't fly again until they have the answers," he said, referring to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

far more concerned when two of the shuttle's five guidance computers failed in space. He said he had no explanation why the computers failed, but he suggested that their failure caused two "hard" firings of Columbia's primary thruster jets that "felt like somebody hit the bottom of our table (spacecraft) with a sledgehammer. It was really a hard rap."

Mr. Young said, adding that he was "We were never in any trouble."

Chile's Airline Faces U.S. Action in Letelier Case

By Tamar Lewin
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — A U.S. district judge says he will have Chile's national airline put into receivership unless it posts bond to cover the Chilean government's liability for a 1976 car bombing in Washington that killed Orlando Letelier, the former Chilean ambassador, and Ronni Moffitt, his co-worker.

The order was expected to be issued Tuesday in New York. But at Monday's hearing, Judge Morris Lasker said the receivership order and the posting of the bond, which would be from $3 million to $4 million, would not go into effect until next Tuesday to give the carrier, LAN-Chile Airlines, time to appeal.

Thomas Engel, a lawyer for LAN-Chile, said, "We will appeal this order, which we think is a violation not only of international law but of American law." He added: "We intend to continue our operations without interruption until this matter is litigated to a final resolution."

The bond would be used to insure the payment of a three-year-old federal court judgment awarding the survivors of Mr. Letelier and Mrs. Moffitt $2.9 million in damages from the Chilean government, whose intelligence agent, Michael V. Townley, was convicted of Chilean government representatives never appeared in court and never paid the money. In diplomatic notes sent to the U.S. State Department for transmittal to the court, Chile argued that, under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act, an American law, the U.S. courts have no jurisdiction to hear the damage claims arising out of the murders.

Chile, the notes say, consents to jurisdiction in foreign courts "only as to claims based on a commercial contract, and as to no other claims."

To try to collect the damages, lawyers for the survivors have gone after the assets of LAN-Chile, contending that because the airline is owned by the government and was used to transport both Mr. Townley and the explosives used in the bombing, its assets should be used to satisfy the judgment.

Joseph Cyr, one of the lawyers providing free representation to the survivors, said, "Judge Lasker indicated... that he was willing to find that the Republic of Chile had used LAN-Chile to facilitate the assassination of Orlando Letelier and Ronni Moffitt, and therefore to disregard its separate legal entity and execute judgment on the assets of LAN."

Chile, the notes say, consents to jurisdiction in foreign courts "only as to claims based on a commercial contract, and as to no other claims."

U.S. Aid to Zimbabwe Is Cut Almost by Half; UN Votes Seen as Cause

By Jay Ross
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. government has cut aid to Zimbabwe by almost half, to $40 million, in a move that is likely to cause further deterioration in relations with the southern African country.

Officials at the Agency for International Development said Monday that congressional cuts in the overall foreign aid appropriation were to blame for the lowering of assistance to Zimbabwe from $75 million. But State Department sources said privately that Zimbabwe's recent votes against U.S. positions at the United Nations "played a big part" in the decision.

Zimbabwe co-sponsored a UN resolution deploring the "armed intervention" by the United States in Grenada, and it abstained in the Security Council in September on a U.S.-sponsored resolution criticizing the Soviet Union for shooting down a South Korean airliner.

The State Department denied any political motivation for the reduction, which was approved by Secretary of State George P. Shultz. But an AID official said he could not recall any other case in which a major aid recipient in Africa had had its allocation so heavily cut. Kenya is the second largest loser. It dropped from $45 million in aid to $40 million.

Representative William H. Gray 3d, Democrat of Pennsylvania, called the cut in aid to Zimbabwe "a tragic mistake" and part of a "disastrous policy" by the Reagan administration to punish some nations for not supporting the United States in UN votes. He also disputed the government's position that the reduction is necessary because Congress reduced the AID budget.

"There was enough money to do $75 million for Zimbabwe if they had wanted to," said Mr. Gray, a leader of the Congressional Black Caucus. He said he would sponsor legislation to restore the cut.

Frank Donatelli, AID director for Africa, declined to comment on allegations that the cut was related to UN votes, except to say, "I'm not going to disguise that there have been difficulties between the two countries. They are under active discussion."

The United States has been the major donor to Zimbabwe, formerly Rhodesia, since independence three years ago.

Salvador Arrest Linked To Killing of U.S. Aides

By Robert J. McCarthy
Washington Post Service

SAN SALVADOR — The National Police detained Monday an army captain suspected of helping plan the 1981 murder of two U.S. advisers on land reform, a senior police officer said.

The arrest marked the Salvadoran government's first concrete response to a list of U.S. demands for action against rightist death squads that was presented here this month by Vice President George Bush.

Mr. Bush, who specifically called for the captain's arrest, offered increased military aid if the demands were met, according to sources who declined to be identified.

The U.S. government hopes that the officer, Captain Eduardo Avila, will provide testimony against a lieutenant whom a U.S. report accuses of having played the major role in organizing the murders, sources said.

Two National Guardsmen have confessed to carrying out the killings, but the U.S. Embassy has been frustrated by its inability to obtain legal action against the higher ranking suspects in the case.

A colonel in the National Police, Ricardo Alfonso Casanova, said his men had detained Captain Avila on orders of the armed forces' high command but that he did not know the reason for the arrest. The high command condemned the death squads last week.

Michael P. Hammer and Mark D. Pearlman were shot to death in a San Salvador hotel Jan. 3, 1981. Both were working on El Salvador's land reform program and were killed at the same time as the head of the Salvadoran Institute of Land Reform, José Adolfo Viera.

Captain Avila and Lieutenant Rodolfo López Sibrian met with one of the guardsmen outside the hotel just before the shooting, according to a U.S. Embassy document.

Lieutenant López Sibrian provided a submachine gun and other weapons for the killing, and Captain Avila lent a coat to conceal the submachine gun, the report said.

BUSINESS PEOPLE

Claude Prétot Is Named Chairman, Managing Chief of Monsanto (France)

Claude Prétot has been named chairman and managing director of Monsanto (France), a subsidiary of the U.S.-based chemicals concern. He succeeds Jean Thévenaz, 60, who is leaving the company. Mr. Prétot, a 43-year-old agricultural engineer who joined Monsanto in 1979, is to continue to be in charge of the company's agro-chemicals division. In other management changes, the Monsanto (France) board has named three new members: Jean Thomas, who heads the company's chemical, plastic and resin products division; Bernard Assens, director of Monsanto Agriculture for Europe and Africa; and Kenneth Oberhammer, financial director of Monsanto Europe-Africa.

Weissmann to Become Biogen Head

The scientific board of Biogen, the Swiss biotechnology company, has elected Charles Weissmann, 52, to succeed Walter Gilbert as its chairman, effective Jan. 1. Mr. Gilbert has resigned as chairman to devote more of his time to his position as Biogen's principal executive officer and chairman of the supervisory board that runs the company's business affairs.

Mr. Weissmann is a founding member of the scientific board that oversees the company's research and development activities. He has been professor of molecular biology and director of the Institute of Molecular Biology at the University of Zurich since 1967. His current projects for Biogen focus on human leukocyte and immune interferon.

In January 1980, his university laboratory was the first to report the cloning of human alpha interferon and the production of active interferon by bacteria. Alpha interferon was subsequently developed by Biogen and licensed to Schering Corp. Schering is currently conducting human clinical trials of alpha interferon as a treatment for a variety of cancers and as a preventive of viral infections, including the common cold.

Other Appointments

P.E. Hammond, a deputy chairman of Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corp., is to retire in May. Mr. Hammond, who joined the bank in 1948, has been an executive director since March 1980, and was appointed deputy chairman in 1981. He is to be succeeded by William Purves, 51, who has been executive director, banking, since August 1982. He is also chairman of the bank's merchant banking subsidiary, Wardley Ltd. Robert Farrell, currently group staff controller, is to join the board in May as an executive director.

Brad C. Lesher has been appointed to the new position of assistant general manager, staff operations, for IBM's Southeast Asia headquarters in Hong Kong. He was formerly the director of office and communications systems for IBM World Trade America/Far East headquarters in New York. Mr. Lesher, who joined the U.S. computer company in 1957, will be responsible for marketing and business planning.

François de Laage de Meux is to be the next chairman of COGEE Alstom, the Paris-based electrical contractors, succeeding Marcel-Henry Marty, who retires at the end of December. Mr. de Laage de Meux is currently deputy general director of COGEE Alstom's holding company, Cie Générale d'Electricité.

The Frankfurt-based chemicals concern Hoechst has announced the appointment of Andrew Chisholm as group treasurer of the Hoechst U.K. Ltd. group, succeeding Robert Chisholm, who has joined English China Clay. Mr. Donald was previously group treasurer of Laporte Industries (Holdings) PLC.

Israel Discount Bank Ltd. has appointed Asher Michaeli as its British representative in London, succeeding Moshe Mehar, who has joined First International Bank of Israel. Mr. Michaeli, who formerly represented the bank in South America, also is to represent the bank's American subsidiary, Israel Discount Bank of New York.

John H. Churchill is to take over as chief executive of Shovelco & Drewry Ltd., a British vehicle maker, Jan. 3. Mr. Churchill, formerly director of operations in Britain and France for Sperry Vickers, succeeds W.T. Lees, who will remain a board member of the parent company, Butterfield Harvey.

Fernando de Caralt is to succeed Enrique de Guzman when he retires as president-general manager of the Spanish aeronautics company, Construcciones Aeronauticas SA. Mr. de Caralt, who has been general manager since 1981, was nominated by the Instituto Nacional de Industria, which holds 70 percent of the company's stock.

Continental Illinois National Bank & Trust Co. has named Richard E. Jones as vice president of its Europe, Africa and Middle East group. He was previously a second vice president.

Christmas Sales Are Rising Around the World

Chic, Expensive Items Apparently Favored As Presents This Year

By Tamar Lewin
New York Times Service

NEW YORK — In England, goggles to wear while chopping onions are a big Christmas item. In Japan, it is fancy ski suits. And almost everywhere except Spain, home computers are among the most popular gifts to put under the tree this year.

Around the world — even in countries facing high unemployment rates and economic crisis — retailers are having a merrier, more profitable, Christmas season than they had last year.

In Paris, Socialist austerity has not taken the glitter off the Christmas displays along the Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré. At Louis Vuitton, the famous luggage and handbag shop, Chantal de Franqueville says, "People aren't afraid to buy expensive, chic things. They are putting their tongue out at the economic crisis."

In Tokyo, where the big selling bulge is due less to Christmas than to the custom of end-of-year gifts, the personal computer is the rage for young people.

Although Cabbage Patch dolls have been a craze in London just as in the United States — Harrods and Hamleys, which call itself the world's biggest toy shop, each sold out their quota of 500 dolls in one morning early this month — the Barbie doll has made a big comeback in Bonn.

year. Toys are up 22 percent, and a spokesman for Bon Marché says overall sales are up about 11 percent from last Christmas, although big-ticket sales, such as furniture and carpets, are down.

At Galeries Lafayette, a spokesman said the Christmas shopping rush appeared to be starting a little later than last year, with the best sales so far coming in the women's clothing departments.

At Hermès, the purveyor of luxury silk and leather goods, spokeswoman Flavie Chaillet reports a small drop in French customers, which has been more than compensated for by a substantial increase in American shoppers eager to cash in on the strong dollar. Leather handbags and silk scarves are the best sellers, she said.

Business is brisk this season at the famous Paris jewelry houses. Danielle Charles, a Cartier spokeswoman, says sales are up 21 percent.

London

In London, this year's most popular toys include video games, Star Wars toys, the Sindy doll — and the 25,000 Cabbage Patch dolls allocated to England, which cleared the shelves well before the Christmas rush ended.

At Harrods, one of London's leading luxury department stores, the most expensive toy, a gas-driven Range Rover costing $3,600, has sold very well, and overall sales at the store are 20 percent higher this year than last. Among the favorite items this Christmas (Continued on Page 11, Col. 6)

Japan's GNP Rises at 6.2% Annual Rate

The Associated Press

TOKYO — Japan's economy grew at an annual rate of 6.2 percent in the third quarter, a sharp rise from the previous quarter and its fastest in three years, the government said Tuesday.

Private economists said the figures from the Economic Planning Agency confirmed that Japan's recovery is on track but said they doubted the July-September period's pace would be maintained.

The growth of the inflation-adjusted gross national product, the value of Japan's output of goods and services, was up from the 4.5 percent annual rate of gain between April and June and the 0.9 percent rise in the first three months of the year. It was the sharpest growth since the 6.3 percent increase in the summer of 1980.

In comparison, the gross national product of the United States grew at an annual rate of 7.7 percent in the third quarter of this year after surging 9.7 percent last spring and rising 2.6 percent in the first quarter.

Analysts said they were encouraged by Tuesday's report because of signs that private demand had started to pick up in Japan, reducing the economy's heavy reliance on exports.

Most private economists said they expected Japan's economy to meet government growth goals of 3.4 percent in the 1983 fiscal year, which ends March 31, 1984. But Naoki Tanaka, an economist at the Research Institute of National Economy, said he thought the third quarter growth rate "a bit high."

Mr. Tanaka said he expected Japan's economic growth would slow to an annual rate of 4 to 5 percent in the second half of the fiscal year. Exports continued to remain vital to Japan's growth, and climbed 5 percent from the previous quarter.

Speak German

(or French, Spanish, Arabic and others)
like a Diplomat!

What sort of people need to learn a foreign language as quickly and effectively as possible? Foreign service personnel, that's who. You can learn the same way with the course designed by the Foreign Service Institute (FSI) for use by U.S. State Department personnel stationed abroad. THE FSI BASIC GERMAN COURSE.

The basic German Course consists of a set of audio cassettes and accompanying text books; you simply follow the written and recorded instructions. With the FSI's unique learning method you set your own pace — testing yourself, correcting errors, and reinforcing accurate responses. It is, we believe, the best course available to teach you a comprehensive knowledge of German.

The FSI's introductory Basic German comes in two parts. Vol. I provides an introduction to the simpler forms of the language and a basic vocabulary. Vol. II introduces more complex structures and additional vocabulary.

You may order one or both courses

Unconditional Guarantee —
Try the course for three weeks. If you are not convinced it's the fastest, easiest, most painless way to learn German, return it and we will refund every penny you paid.

TO ORDER, JUST CLIP THIS AD and mail it with your name and address and a cheque or money order. Or, charge it to your credit card (American Express, VISA, Access, Diners Club) by enclosing card number, expiration date, and your signature.

The Touch of Christmas Present

LONDON — Now I believe the Christmas spirit is upon us. It was well past midnight Monday when the Manchester United players, dressed in their traditional red and white striped shirts, were seen in the streets of Manchester. They were seen in the streets of Manchester, they were seen in the streets of Manchester.

ROB HUGHES

deserved his club supporters' loyalty. Last April he tried to leave through a merger with another club, but the supporters would not allow it. The fans rebelled; Maxwell's name was still there. And barely a year ago the publishing magnate was buying an at-the-top building from scratch, named in his honor. It is a sign of his success, he said, that he would like to see the club more worthy of his name.

NFL Packers Fire Starr, Staff

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Green Bay Packers coach Vince Lombardi fired head coach Bart Starr and his entire coaching staff on Monday. Lombardi said the firing was necessary because the team had lost 10 of its last 11 games. Starr had been with the team since 1961, and had led the team to three NFL championships.

antagonizing the Oxford faithful. Not content to have raised the prices of all tickets for the match, he had also turned ticket scalping, to our American friends.

Quite suddenly, an affable soccer club was in the black and a university city had something else to take pride in. But I will wager that, come the more normal fare at the Manor Ground, Maxwell, if he is still around, will come to rue the day he priced out the loyal Oxford fans who may be on hard times right now.

I doubt any lifelong supporter not affluent enough to attend the big night will ever forgive the club's financial "savior." Indeed, it's not hard to see why 400 protestors marched past his mansion last spring bearing effigies of the devil and shaking their fists.

Yet the tide of soccer emotions is a swiftly changing thing. Monday's 2-1 victory, thoroughly deserved by a team of virtual unknowns outplaying a 24 million collection of internationals, brought at least a temporary comradeship between the lord of the manor and the youngsters among the privileged crowd of 13,912.

And now, on a night off from the interminable problems his industry has with its work force, he was back among the raw passions of working-class kids; at for a game of soccer. He touched them, shook them by the hand, reached out affectionately to grasp one lad around the neck and — and in that instant we saw what it is that attracts self-made millionaires to the financial meadows of soccer club directorships. Scrooge and Tiny Tim, indeed.

When finally he came in out of the damp night, and when the floodlights could be turned down (they need to be, quickly, after play at this level of existence), Maxwell began looking forward.

Robert Maxwell

There is Everton in the next round, another club of the First Division but not currently of Manchester's stature. "I feel satisfaction of a job well done," said the chairman. "And I'm looking forward to further success, only I don't think we ought to take three games to finish Everton off."

He may have been joking; Christmas, after all, comes before Oxford's next match. Well, it's not just in the heart of England that the seasonal spirit moves men's souls. It is there in abundance in the first edition of FIFA magazine, the splendid new quarterly publication of soccer's ruling body for a sport now played in more than 150 countries.

We have long awaited this publication and, by turning to Page 7, we are rewarded by a full-page color photograph of five West German international players evincing more festive good cheer. They have presumably just scored a goal, because Heren Stielke, Briegel, Voltz, Schuster and others are wrestling on the ground in a welter of fond embrace. "Spirit of the game," proclaims the prominent caption. "It's in every game you play."

49ers Clinch Title In NFC West With Rout of Cowboys

SAN FRANCISCO — An interception in the opening minutes set up the first of four touchdowns passes by Joe Montana as the San Francisco 49ers thrashed Dallas, 42-17, here Monday night to ride into the National Football League playoffs as division champions.

The 49ers finished the season at 10-6, claiming the National Conference West title over the 9-7 Los Angeles Rams. Relegated to wild-card status, the Rams will play the 12-4 Cowboys in Irving, Texas, on Monday.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

AN INSTANT MONEY MAKER

THAT CAN EARN YOU UP TO US$5000-US$10,000 PER MONTH

Want a business that's off the cash that's off the cash that's off the cash...that has no franchise fees or restrictions...that's portable...that's ideal for home, office or roadside.

Then you might be in pictures - COMPUTER CAPTURE, that is. With a REMA COMPUTER PORTFOLIO SYSTEM, you don't have to sell to customers.

You just line them up and shoot them off their pictures by computer in black and white or color.

Tell the portraits on 14" film, color prints or positives that you can get for cash. The Rema system is a push-button computer that a child can operate. It takes about $10,000 for the computer and 3 1/2 white system to $25,000 for a deluxe color system. REMA Canada, Attn: DZ1, P. Schenckel 174262.
